

Chaotic Nodes: A Hathor Planetary Message through Tom Kenyon

April 27, 2009

Any energetic system that shifts to higher or lower orders of coherency passes through chaotic events in its journey to a new resting energy state. Your earth is no exception to this.

With this in mind, we anticipate a planetary increase in chaotic events. By this we mean that a large-scale chaotic event(s) is near. We call such events, "Chaotic Nodes." They are a precursor to geometric progressions of chaotic events, and you are at the threshold of such a node.

"Chaotic Nodes" are actually crests in quantum wave potential driven by the interaction of many energetic domains simultaneously.

Let's take a look at water as a metaphor for what we are discussing, and then we would like to extrapolate this to your world situation.

When you boil water, the molecules that comprise the water (which are made from the bonding of atomic hydrogen and oxygen) speed up. This is unseen by you because this domain is too small for you to see. But if you touch the pot, you will feel warmth. As the heat continues, the water molecules move around even faster, bumping into each other more often, creating even more friction. Some of the water moves into a faster rate of vibration and changes its nature from water into steam. If you touch the pot at this point, you would describe it as hot. Indeed, it would burn you if you kept your hands on the pot of boiling water too long.

Prior to the application of heat to the water, one could say that the water resided within a certain energy domain, which you could measure via its temperature. As the temperature increases, due to the application of heat, there is an increase of chaos as the water molecules start moving more rapidly.

Now, if water molecules had the human characteristic of resistance to change, then they would find the increased heat and the resulting chaos difficult to contend with.

When the water reaches boiling point, it enters what we call a "Chaotic Node." This is a shifting of energy state, and if you look into a pot of water just before it starts to boil, you can see this.

At first there is a trickle of bubbles up to the surface, and as these reach the surface of the water, steam is emitted. At first you will see just a little bit of steam, but as the entire pot of water reaches the boiling point, you will see what is called a "roiling boil." At this point, the water is very turbulent and a lot of it starts to change its energy state from a liquid (water) into a gas (steam).

The point we wish to make here is that a "Chaotic Node" is similar to water shifting to a roiling boil, in that it (water moving from being hot to a roiling boil) is a sudden shift that is inherently volatile. And once a "Chaotic Node" manifests, it is very difficult to predict what will happen next.

If you were a single molecule of water in this roiling boil that just entered a "Chaotic Node," you would be hard pressed to know where you might be at any moment. You might be at the bottom of the pot and suddenly find yourself driven up to the surface by rapidly moving convection currents. And in a swift unanticipated moment, you could shift your energy state from water to vapor (steam).

This is a metaphor, of course. And we are not implying that you are as simple as water. But the principles of "Chaotic Nodes" apply to all energy systems, including both your energy systems and the energy systems of earth.

As we said, we anticipate that you are at the cusp of one such "Chaotic Node." And there are any number of factors that can start the process. As we said earlier, "Chaotic Nodes" are driven by the interaction of many energetic domains simultaneously. And there are a large number of possible catalysts, including but certainly not limited to, increased solar flare activity, bacterial and viral mutations, ecosystem distress, severe fluctuations in weather patterns affecting the availability of food and water, earth changes including volcanic and earthquake activity, financial instability, and political ineptitude in managing world events.

When a "Chaotic Node" arrives on your timeline it is likely that several of these factors will escalate and interact with each other in ways that cannot be anticipated.

As we view it, there is a high probability that you will experience other "Chaotic Nodes" in the next ten years, with increasing intensity and frequency (meaning that there will be an increase in their numbers).

From the vantage point of a being who wishes to reside in lower energy states and its attendant lower states of consciousness (i.e. your average human), the arrival of a "Chaotic Node" is not an easy thing to contend with. This is because all types of unpredictable events and relationships will arise as the chaos reaches a crescendo point. Many people will tend to mental and emotional instability in the face of a "Chaotic Node." This is a result of their perceived reality collapsing.

Indeed, in the coming years, many facets of your individual and collective realities will be challenged.

From our perspective, this increase in "Chaotic Nodes" is both an inescapable aspect of energy-state physics and a requirement for your shift into higher dimensions of consciousness.

This will be a challenging time for many as the world they thought they knew morphs (changes) before them. But it is also a period with immense potential for accelerated evolution (meaning a shift into higher dimensions of consciousness). By higher dimensions of consciousness, we specifically mean an awareness of time and space that is simultaneously not confined by these perceptions. At present, humanity is keenly aware of its material existence, but not so aware of its existence in other realms of energy (dimensions). When the bulk of humanity experiences the existence of other realms of energy collectively, it will enter a Golden Age.

But alas, you are still in the birthing process of this and have not yet been collectively born into this reality.

Some individuals are making this shift, even in the midst of increased chaos. In fact, if you are prepared, these "Chaotic Nodes" can actually assist you to shift your own energy states to a higher order. The result of this shift in consciousness is that you will become more creative when dealing with new and novel situations. And shifting to an energy state that is of a higher order (increased coherency) will allow you to directly experience your transcendent nature, which is beyond the constraints of time and space even while you live an embodied life.

Our advice during "Chaotic Nodes" is to engage the Holon of Ascension as often as possible. This will shift your energy state and allow you to pass through the chaotic elements of your reality more graciously and with greater fluidity, allowing you to more likely be in "the right place at the right time" rather than in "the wrong place at the wrong time." In point of fact, from our view, there is no right or wrong place to be. It is what you do with what presents itself to you that matters.

As humanity collectively begins to pass into this imminent "Chaotic Node," expect more of the unexpected than you could ever imagine even in your wildest sci-fi movies. Engage the Holon of Ascension often. Shift your own energy. Move up the ladder of consciousness.

Thoughts and Observations from Tom

Although this message deals with physics, I think it is pretty self-explanatory. And I certainly think the water metaphor is apt, because if nothing else, the "heat" seems to be turning up, so to speak.

After receiving this particular message, I did ask the Hathors to clarify their statement that this "Chaotic Node" was imminent. My experience with higher dimensional beings is that they have a very different sense of time than us, and what may seem like an eternity to us, is but a blink of the cosmic eye for them.

And so when I asked for clarification, they said that as they view it now, there are multiple domains of increasing chaos that are interacting in new and novel ways. Thus predicting when the exact moment a "Chaotic Node" will manifest on our timeline is, necessarily, variable.

Let's take a look at this Hathorian concept by picking three arbitrary domains. First is our biosphere. Due to global warming, whatever the reasons, wildlife is being threatened due to loss of habitat and food sources. This threat includes a whole host of species, from the Lemurs of Madagascar who are under so much stress some have stopped reproducing, to polar bears who are losing the ice that was their territory, to whales that are losing food sources, to even certain types of trees that have stopped producing oxygen. This is just one domain we could loosely call our ecosystem.

Then there are the ever-increasing weather anomalies that are wrecking havoc all over the globe.

What we, the human species, seem to forget is that we are part of the ecosystem. We may be at the top of the food chain, and we may be the dominant species in terms of being able to affect the environment around us. But if the stresses affecting other species are so intense as to affect their reproduction, then are we next?

Indeed, some strong studies coming out of Canada indicate that the use of certain plastics, such as are used in plastic baby bottles, seems to be affecting the reproductive ability of boy babies. There is growing evidence that as some of these male children mature, their reproductive systems are failing them. Will we follow in the steps of the Lemurs?

And so we have here, for the sake of discussion, three interacting domains: 1) the ecosystem itself, 2) erratic weather patterns that are stressing plant and animal life, and 3) our technological civilization that seems to be radically affecting the other two domains of ecology and weather (not to mention the possible reproductive ability of its own male children—at least in Western industrialized nations).

As the changes in these domains increase at an accelerated pace, chaotic elements naturally arise.

Take for instance the recent snafu at a major university that emailed acceptance letters to thousands of students that had actually been rejected—a chaotic element at work albeit clerical in nature.

What the Hathors are saying is that there are so many domains interacting with each other at the same time, the rate of chaos is increasing.

As a result, little chaotic elements are at play and interacting to create larger chaotic elements. When you have enough large chaotic elements interacting, you have a "Chaotic Node." And that is what the Hathors are alerting us to.

So back to their word "imminent." When I pressed them for a timeline, they said that they see a high probability of a "Chaotic Node" manifesting anywhere from a period of several weeks from the day they gave the message (April 27, 2009), up to nine months or so. But they insisted that this was only an educated guess. The volatility of the times makes it impossible to say with certainty when "the pot will start to roil."

The point they are trying to make is that chaos is a natural part of the evolutionary process and not to be frightened by it, but instead to use it as a means to further accelerate our own personal evolution—regardless of what those around us might or might not be doing.

There is one other thing about their message I wasn't clear about. What did they mean when they said "political ineptitude in managing world events?" Well it turns out that the term has a larger context for them than I thought.

For them, political ineptitude includes the usual human stupidity, greed and ignorance, and when you add this to the mix of chaotic world events, you have a combination that could and would likely make things worse.

But ineptitude, for the Hathors, also includes nefarious and evil intent on the part of the "shadow governments" of some countries to intentionally mislead the people and in some cases, actually manipulate and control human destiny. The Hathors specifically used the word ineptitude in referencing the shadow governments not because they are clumsy or unskilled, but because the behaviors they are currently choosing (i.e., to control and manipulate) are leading to their own devolution. And in spite of their cleverness, they are on a dead-end path.

So all of this is part of the mix, which to use a good French term is like a mélange of the good and the bad, the beautiful and the ugly. The soup is on, and the heat is definitely turned up.

What each of us does in our collective pot will certainly be a show worth watching.

Lastly, whatever comes out of the cosmic kitchen (so to speak), I can personally vouch for the Hathors' comments about the Holon of Ascension being a powerful way to shift consciousness.

Ever since they gave me the Holon of Ascension, I have been experimenting with it in all types of situations. And I must say that it is remarkably effective at shifting my own energy state and perception even when I am feeling funky, fatalistic and generally negative about the world, my life and the human condition.

But the only way for you to assess if the Holon of Ascension will be as powerful for you as it is for me, is to try it for yourself.

A complete description of how to engage the Holon of Ascension can be found on our website, www.tomkenyon.com, in the Hathor section and is entitled The Holon of Ascension, March 10, 2009.
